Women's History/Our History: Carin Clauss, A First

Carin Ann Clauss advocated for equality throughout her career, both in and out of court. And by example. She won praise for successful arguments related to the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967. As the department's first woman solicitor, Clauss provided daily evidence of what a capable, dedicated woman could achieve if given the opportunity. Clauss joined the department in 1963 after graduating from Columbia Law School. She advanced quickly, serving as an attorney, special assistant, deputy counsel and counsel before becoming associate solicitor for the Fair Labor Standards Division in 1971. Between 1965 and 1976, Clauss briefed or argued nearly every equal pay case that reached the court of appeals. On Feb. 24, 1977, President Jimmy Carter picked her from the career ranks and nominated her to be solicitor of labor. At the time of her Senate confirmation, she was only 38 years old. From 1977 to 1981, Clauss directed all of the department's legal activities, including litigation, rulemaking and advisory opinion services. Today, she teaches labor and employment law courses at the University of Wisconsin Law School and provides pro bono legal services, specializing in sex discrimination.

M. Patricia Smith, the current solicitor, is the second woman to hold the job. Since the department was founded in 1913, there have been 34 solicitors of labor.

President Announces Thomas Perez for Secretary of Labor

Growing the nation's economy and strengthening the middle class is the top priority of President Obama, and he sounded those themes on March 18 when he announced the nomination of Thomas E. Perez to be the next secretary of labor.

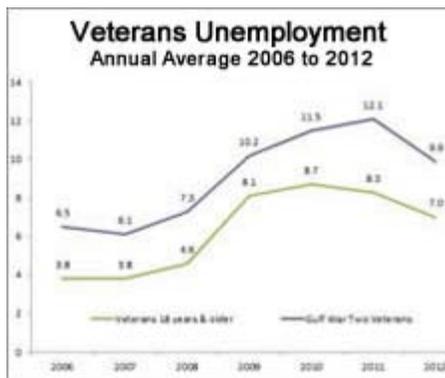

Perez currently serves as the assistant attorney general for the Justice Department's Civil Rights Division. He previously served as the secretary of Maryland's Department of Labor, Licensing and Regulation, which enforces workplace safety laws, wage and hour laws and a range of consumer rights laws. In Maryland, the president said, Perez "helped implement the country's first statewide living-wage law, because he understood that a minimum wage should be a wage that you can live on." Perez, the president said, "understands that our economy works best when the middle class and those working to get into the middle class have the security they need on the job, a democratic voice in the workplace, everybody playing by the same set of rules."

Report for 2012 Shows Significant Drop in Veterans' Unemployment

The unemployment rate for Gulf War-era II veterans — those who served on active duty at any time after September 2001 — fell by 2.2 percentage points in 2012, according to a report from the Bureau of Labor Statistics released March 20. The jobless rate for all veterans fell from 8.3 percent in 2011 to 7 percent in 2012. "While this morning's report shows that we are moving in the right direction on reducing unemployment among America's veterans, much more needs to be done to ensure that no veteran struggles to find work after serving honorably to keep us safe and secure," acting Secretary of Labor Seth D. Harris said. The report is compiled annually by BLS to provide year-over-year data on veterans' employment, and includes a supplement to the August 2012 survey that expands the collected data to include information on topics such as service-connected disability and current or past Reserve of National Guard membership.

- 2012 Veterans Employment Report Reveals Positive Signs: Signs of progress on getting veterans back to work as our economy steadily recovers were abundant in an annual report on veterans employment issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics on March 20. Acting Secretary of Labor Harris points out both the encouraging statistics for veterans overall and the positive downward trends in the unemployment rates for several veteran populations. "We must continue to use every tool available to honor their sacrifice by helping them find opportunities to succeed in good middle-class jobs," Harris writes.
- Supporting Our Service Women: Writing jointly to commemorate Women's History Month, Keith Kelly, assistant secretary of labor for veterans' employment and training, and Latifa Lyles, acting director of the Women's Bureau, praise the fortitude of women veterans and highlight the department's efforts to provide services that help them successfully transition to civilian careers.
- Technology as a Tool of Inclusion: Assistant Secretary of Labor for Disability Employment Policy Kathy Martinez writes about her visit to the International Technology and Persons with Disabilities Conference at the California State University of Northridge and discusses the role of assistive technology in ODEP initiatives.

Supporting Working Families

In a speech to the International Association of Firefighters 2013 legislative conference, acting Secretary of Labor Harris celebrated the heroism of firefighters and other public servants who "are the heartbeat of communities nationwide." Harris gave an impassioned defense of public employee unions and their collective bargaining rights in the face of a "withering assault." The Labor Department and the Obama administration, Harris said, "stand with public employees in their struggle, committed to building an economy that strengthens and expands the middle class." He added, "If the financial sector was too big to fail — then I think America's firefighter's courage is too big for us to fail them."

Nation's Workers Make Case for Minimum Wage Raise

Acting Secretary Harris made stops in Ohio and Indiana on March 20 as part of his promise to meet with low-wage workers across the country and hear how a raise in the federal minimum wage would help them. "My commitment to you is that if you share your stories with me, I'll share them with those in Washington," Harris told a gathering in Cincinnati where he was joined by Mayor Mark Mallory. In the Queen City, worker Debra Cofer echoed other workers from around the country who tell of hardship in just trying to afford the basics. "A raise would allow me to do those things I need to do, not just what I want to do, but what I need to do," she told Harris. Next door in the Hoosier state, Kenji Williams told Harris at a discussion in Indianapolis, "You end up borrowing money until you get your paycheck, only to have to pay that back when you do get your paycheck and you end up not being able to pay your bills." Harris has met with workers in eight states since President Obama called for raising the federal minimum wage in his State of the Union address from $7.25 per hour to $9 per hour by 2015. Harris plans on meeting with more workers across the country in the weeks ahead.

From Midwest to Southwest, a Call for a Raise

The acting deputy administrator for the Wage and Hour Division, Mary Beth Maxwell, also has been meeting with workers around the country about raising the federal minimum wage. She made a stop in Indiana on March 20 and listened to workers in the city of Gary discuss their struggles to afford necessities like food, housing and transportation. They also remarked on how an increase in pay will not only lessen that struggle, but lead to greater self-worth. "With a little extra money to save, it makes you feel human," said William Ivey who holds down several jobs. "All of us at this table are living paycheck to paycheck." In the Lone Star State on March 14, Maxwell heard from Irasema Cavazos in San Antonio who underscored the respect that many low-wage working Americans have for the value of work over accepting government support. "We don't want handouts; we know there is dignity in work," she said. "We want to be compensated for work. We want to work, to raise a family." Maxwell also visited Houston on March 15 and heard from workers there.

spoke about compliance with the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Migrant and Seasonal Agricultural Worker Protection Act, and the H-2A program, among other federal laws. Hancock highlighted the need to ensure compliance with labor standards to help eliminate the unfair competitive advantage that some employers gain from paying workers substandard wages. Topics included the division's investigative process, child labor rules, the need to keep accurate records of wages paid and hours worked, and FLSA's "hot goods" provision. He also stressed that the vast majority of employers want to comply with the law and that the department will provide assistance in understanding requirements.

Safety First in Little Rock

Better health and safety for construction workers at the 120,000-square-foot Bass Pro Shop project in Little Rock, Ark., is a top priority of a new partnership between the Occupational Safety and Health Administration and VCC, LLC. "This partnership affirms a shared commitment toward providing a safer work environment on this project," said Carlos Reynolds, OSHA's area director in Little Rock. OSHA and VCC will work together to reduce serious workplace injuries and illnesses at the worksite, increase the number of safety and health programs among contractors and subcontractors and build a relationship focused on preventing work-related fatalities.

Keeping Jobs in the USA

A total of $40 million in funding from four federal agencies is now being offered to qualified applicants to develop projects that accelerate job creation by encouraging insourcing by U.S. firms. The Employment and Training Administration is partnering with the Department of Commerce, the National Institute of Standards and Technology Manufacturing Extension Partnership, and the Delta Regional Authority to build upon the Obama administration's bottom-up approach to strengthening the economy by partnering with state, regional and local co-investors. Applications for the "Make it in America" Challenge funding will be accepted until May 31. Proposed projects should "foster increased foreign direct investment, encourage companies who are considering leaving the U.S. to keep or expand their businesses — and jobs — here at home, and training local workers to meet the needs of those businesses."

Pathways to Prosperity for Young People

The persistent difficulties of preparing young people for good jobs in the current economic recovery were the subject of a conference at Harvard University in Boston on March 18. Assistant Secretary of Labor for Employment and Training Jane Oates appeared on a panel discussion entitled "Where Are the Jobs for Young Adults?" along with representatives from industry, academia and the nonprofit sector.

Moderated by Jonas Prising of the ManPower Group, the conference's plenary session was designed to "examine the education and skills young people need to succeed; the outlook for youth employment; and what we must do to improve prospects for young adults." Oates affirmed that the Employment and Training Administration is committed to getting young

For a fourth year, the Women's Bureau and the YWCA of Greater Atlanta have collaborated to present "The Story Behind the Story: A Fireside Chat."

On March 14, more than 100 women attended the Women's History Month event designed to provide working women and girls with inspiration, encouragement and an appreciation of the contributions and professional journeys of successful women in the community. Dr. Alvetta Peterman Thomas, president of Atlanta Technical College, urged young women to look at each life experience, positive and negative, as a learning experience that would ultimately create a beautiful patchwork quilt of their lives. "Although an individual piece may not be particularly attractive, when it is viewed in perspective it adds to the beauty of the quilt and tells the compelling story of your life," Thomas said.

Changing Young Lives

As part of national AmeriCorps Week, the Secretary's Regional Representative Dusti Gurule joined Colorado state officials at a YouthBuild program in Denver on March 14. Eight YouthBuild participants shared compelling stories about how AmeriCorps and YouthBuild changed their lives. Among the officials on hand at the Denver Housing Authority's Mariposa Project in the La Alma neighborhood were Colorado Lt. Gov. Signs, Cranes and Derricks

A special meeting of the Advisory Committee on Construction Safety and Health convened March 18 at the department. Committee members considered a proposed update to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration's standard on accident prevention signs and tags in all industries including construction. Proposed standards in construction and general industry are based on revisions in the American National Standards Institute consensus standard, and give employers the option of applying newer design standards to signs already required by OSHA's standards. The newer design standards allow signs that are more descriptive of hazards. Proposed amendments and corrections to OSHA's Cranes and Derricks standards, published in August 2010, were also discussed at the meeting.

Discussing Key Issues

Global competitiveness, growing the middle class, and disability issues were topics of discussion by Kathy Martinez, assistant secretary of labor for disability employment policy, in Phoenix on March 15 for a meeting with community leaders. She also discussed immigration with disability advocates at the Arizona Bridge to Independent Living's Disability Empowerment Center, saying, "the promise we see in those who come here from every corner of the globe, that's always been one of our greatest strengths." Martinez met with tribal leaders at the Gila River Indian Community to talk about matters affecting Native Americans.

Promoting Flexible Policies

To promote cross-cultural dialogue on disability law and policy, Kathy Martinez, assistant secretary of labor for disability employment policy, participated in a panel discussion at Loyola Law School in Los Angeles on March 18. Martinez joined American and Japanese experts on disability employment in discussing policy challenges and effective strategies related to increasing the employment of people with disabilities in both countries. Martinez highlighted programs and tools that ODEP is using to address issues such as workplace flexibility, accessible technology and access to generic job systems.

Court Grants Judgment Against Kentucky Mine Operator

Failure to pay more than $1.6 million in civil penalties has resulted in a default judgment against D & C Mining Corp., of Harlan County, Ky. In March 2012, the Mine Safety and Health Administration and U.S. Attorney's Office filed a complaint against the coal mine operator. The complaint alleged that D & C failed to pay penalties for 1,244 violations cited in a six-year period. Two weeks ago, the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Kentucky granted the judgment. "Not only has this mine operator repeatedly disregarded health and safety standards and put its miners at tremendous risk, it flouts any attempt by the federal government to collect penalties for violations that have been assessed," said Joseph Main, the assistant secretary of labor who heads MSHA. "MSHA will continue to work with the Department of Justice to pursue mine operators that blatantly refuse to pay their penalties while continuing to operate."

Connecting Workers to Jobs

Workforce investment and training for in-demand skills were predominant themes in recent speeches by Assistant Secretary of Labor for Employment and Training Jane Oates. In Cleveland on March 15, Oates delivered a keynote address to the Strategic Workforce Alignment Group, a project of the Cleveland/Cuyahoga County Workforce Investment Board. She highlighted the department's priorities for workforce investment and gave her perspective on the workgroup's efforts to connect workers with the credentials valued by industry. At the 50th Annual American Technical Education Association National Conference in Chattanooga, Tenn., on March 21, in another keynote, Oates shifted the focus of her remarks to technical education, while reinforcing the importance of working with businesses to identify their most pressing needs and sharing best practices on connecting skilled workers to opportunity.

Safety at Stone, Sand & Gravel

The National Stone, Sand & Gravel Association convened its alliance committee meeting with the Mine Safety and Health Administration on March 19, during its annual convention in San Antonio. Joseph Main, assistant secretary of labor for mine safety and health, addressed the association's board of directors, which represents the crushed stone, sand and gravel-construction aggregates production industries. Main highlighted MSHA initiatives and improvements to mine safety, noting that mining fatalities and injuries are the lowest they have ever been. Overtime Violations at Landscaping Company in North Carolina

KBE Landscaping Inc. of Garner, N.C., has agreed to pay 33 employees $14,651 in back wages following an investigation by the Wage and Hour Division. The investigation determined the company failed to pay employees overtime at time and one-half their regular rates of pay for hours worked in excess of 40. Instead, KBE Landscaping paid overtime only for hours worked beyond 45 in a workweek. The company also failed to pay employees for time spent transporting equipment from the last job site of the day back to the company's headquarters. These unpaid hours resulted in additional violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act's overtime requirements.
