ORDER Re: PLAINTIFFS'
MOTION FOR FEES AND COSTS

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

On December 7, 1987, Plaintiffs brought a class action on behalf of all non- and limited-English-speaking people who had been or would be subject to immigration court proceedings in Los Angeles, El Centro, and San Diego immigration courts. Their complaint alleged that the Executive Office for Immigration Review ("EOIR") engaged in a policy and practice of using incompetent translators ("the competency issue") and of not interpreting many portions of immigration court hearings ("the completeness issue").

213

1 Plaintiffs claimed that this practice deprived class members of (1)
2 their statutory rights to present evidence, cross-examine 3 witnesses, and be effectively represented by counsel; and (2) their 4 constitutional rights to due process and equal protection.

5 After the class was certified, Plaintiffs moved for partial 6 summary judgment on the completeness issue on August 22, 1989. The 7 district judge granted the motion, holding that "EOIR's failure to 8 require full interpretation of immigration court proceedings 9 seriously undermines Plaintiff's statutory right to be present at 10 their proceedings, their right to counsel, their right to examine 11 evidence, and their right to confront and cross-examine witnesses."
12 El Rescate Legal Servs. v. Exec. Office for Immigration Rev., 727
13 F.Supp. 557, 560 (C.D.Cal. 1989), reversed, 959 F.2d 742 (9th Cir.
14 1991). The district judge then issued a permanent injunction 15 requiring EOIR to interpret all portions of the proceedings.

16 The Ninth Circuit reversed the district court's decision. El 17 Rescate Legal Servs. v. Exec. Office for Immigration Rev., 959 F.2d 18 742 (9th Cir. 1991). The appellate court essentially held: (1) 19 EOIR's policy allowing the immigration judge, in his or her 20 discretion, to determine the portions of the hearing to be 21 translated, did not facially violate the Immigration and 22 Nationality Act's requirement of a "reasonable opportunity" to be 23 present, examine witnesses, present evidence, and provide their own
24 representation; and (2) neither the statute nor the EOIR's policy 25 facially violated the Constitution. The Ninth Circuit remanded for 26 a determination of whether the application of the policy 27 systematically denied the class either its statutory or 28

1 constitutional rights. Id. at 752.

2 While the appellate litigation was taking place, the parties
3 were attempting to resolve their differences. After Plaintiffs 4 moved to compel compliance with the injunction on the completeness
5 issue, the parties negotiated a Memorandum of Understanding on June 6 28, 1991, which set out in greater detail the parameters of the 7 permanent injunction, and sufficiently assured Plaintiffs that 8 Defendants would translate virtually all portions of immigration
9 proceedings. Although they no longer felt bound to the Memorandum 10 of Understanding after the Ninth Circuit overturned the injunction, 11 Defendants nevertheless continued to follow the policies outlined 12 in that memorandum.

13 While these actions were taking place on the completeness 14 issue, the competency issue was also being settled through 15 negotiation. In March of 1990, Defendants informed Plaintiffs that 16 they had a plan to develop a certification exam for their 17 interpreters. After several months, settlement negotiations on 18 this issue eventually broke down, allegedly over Defendants' 19 intention to "grandfather" the existing interpreting staff such 20 that they would be exempt from the certification examination. In 21 March of 1991, the district court on its own motion stayed 22 proceedings on the competency issue in order to give Defendants an 23 opportunity to develop and implement various remedial measures they 24 had undertaken to improve the quality of interpretation. The court 25 directed Defendants to share information on these remedial measures 26 with Plaintiffs so that Plaintiffs could provide input while the 27 measures were being implemented.

1 The parties recommenced settlement negotiations in May 1992, 2 and continued to negotiate until the summer of 1993 without 3 reaching a complete agreement. Finally, in July 1993, Plaintiffs 4 moved for voluntary dismissal of the action because they felt they 5 had substantially received the relief they had sought. After 6 notice of the dismissal was provided to the class members, this 7 Court granted Plaintiffs motion for voluntary dismissal without 8 prejudice. Plaintiffs are now seeking an award of attorneys fees 9 and costs.

10 ANALYSIS

11 The Equal Access to Justice Act (EAJA), 28 U.S.C. § 2412, 12 provides for the award of attorneys' fees to prevailing parties in 13 civil actions against the United States as follows:

14 Except as otherwise specifically provided by statute, a court
15 shall award to a prevailing party other than the United States 16 fees and other expenses . . . incurred by that party in any 17 civil action . . ., including proceedings for judicial review 18 of agency action brought by or against the United States in 19 any court having jurisdiction of that action, unless the court
20 finds that the position of the United States was substantially 21 justified or that special circumstances make an award unjust.

22 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(A).

23 I. ARE PLAINTIFFS ENTITLED TO FEES?

24 It should be noted at the outset that Defendants do not 25 dispute that Plaintiffs are "parties" within the meaning of § 26
27
28

1 2412(d)(2)(B).¹ Thus, for Plaintiffs to be entitled to fees under 2 the EAJA, they must show that they are a "prevailing party" within 3 the meaning of § 2412(d)(1)(A). If they do so, the burden shifts
4 to the government to show that its position was "substantially 5 justified." If it was not, Plaintiffs would be entitled to fees.
6 Because Plaintiffs' work on the completeness issue was, for the 7 most part, unrelated to their work on the competence issue, these 8 distinct claims must be analyzed separately when determining 9 whether Plaintiffs are entitled to fees. See Hensley v. Eckerhart, 10 461 U.S. 424, 434-35 (1983).

11 A. Completeness Issue

12 1. Are Plaintiffs a "Prevailing Party"?

13 When a case has not gone to final judgment, the Ninth Circuit
14 has established a two part test for determining prevailing party 15 status. Under this test, "the party seeking to establish 16 'prevailing party' status must demonstrate that: (1) as a factual 17 matter, the relief sought by the lawsuit was in fact obtained as a 18 result of having brought the action, and (2) there was a legal 19 basis for the plaintiffs' claim." Andrew v. Bowen, 837 F.2d 875, 20 877 (9th Cir. 1988) (citing California Association of Physically 21 Handicapped, Inc. v. FCC, 721 F.2d 667, 671-72 (9th Cir.1983), 22 cert. denied, 469 U.S. 832 (1984)); Bullfrog Films, Inc. v. Catto, 23 815 F.Supp. 338, 341 (C.D. Cal. 1993).

24
25 ¹Section 2412(d)(2)(B) provides that a "party" is (i) an 26 individual whose net worth did not exceed $2,000,000 at the time 27 the civil action was filed, or (ii) an organization that did not 28 have a net worth in excess of $7,000,000 and did not have more than 500 employees at the time the civil action was filed.

1 a. Causation

2 Under the first inquiry, Plaintiffs must show that, "as a 3 result of having brought the lawsuit, [they have] received some or 4 all of the relief originally sought." Andrew v. Bowen, 837 F.2d at 5 877. Plaintiffs' lawsuit need not have been the sole cause of 6 Defendants' action; it need only have been a "material factor" or 7 have played a "catalytic role" in bringing about the desired
8 result. Wilderness Soc'y v. Babbitt, 5 F.3d 383, 386 (9th Cir.
9 1993); Oregon Environmental Council v. Kunzman, 817 F.2d 484, 497
10 (9th Cir. 1987) (citations omitted).

11 The Court finds that Plaintiffs' lawsuit on the completeness 12 issue was a material factor in bringing about substantially all of 13 the relief sought. Before the lawsuit, the policy of the EOIR was 14 that the interpreters' function was merely to "provide for the 15 official record of the proceeding for review in English by the 16 immigration judge who has to make the decision and ultimately for 17 review" by reviewing courts. El Rescate, 727 F.Supp. at 560
18 (quoting deposition of Chief Immigration Judge William Robie).
19 Thus, apart from direct questions to non-English speaking
20 witnesses, interpreters would not translate anything from English 21 to the language of the respondent/applicant, including English-22 speaking witnesses' testimony, arguments and objections of counsel, 23 and the judge's decision. Id.

24 On May 12, 1992, after the district court's summary judgment
25 and permanent injunction had been overturned by the Ninth Circuit, 26 Chief Immigration Judge William Robie issued a memorandum outlining 27 the new policy of immigration courts of Los Angeles, San Diego, and 28

1 El Centro concerning the things to be interpreted. The memo states
2 that the testimony of each witness, discussions between the judge 3 and counsel, and the judge's decision should all be translated for 4 the benefit of the respondent/applicant. The only things that do 5 not have to be simultaneously translated for the respondent are:
6 (1) if the respondent is not represented by counsel, the judge may 7 summarize "discussions of legal, procedural, or administrative 8 matters" concerning the case; and (2) if the respondent is 9 represented, the interpretation of social or extraneous matters not 10 substantively related to the case need not be interpreted, and 11 discussions regarding procedural and administrative matters may be 12 summarized for the respondent.

13 When the pre-litigation policy of the EOIA is compared with 14 the current policy, it is apparent that Plaintiffs have 15 substantially received what they have requested. The entire policy 16 of the EOIA has shifted from translating only what was necessary to 17 have a complete English record towards translating what is 18 necessary to ensure "all respondents/applicants [are] provided a 19 fundamentally fair hearing." (Robie Memorandum of May 12, 1992.)
20 This is precisely what Plaintiffs were seeking in their lawsuit.

21 It is also clear that Plaintiffs' lawsuit played at least a 22 "catalytic role" or was at least a "material factor" in bringing 23 about EOIA's change in policy. Wilderness Soc'y, supra.
24 Particularly telling is the fact that the new policy outlined by 25 the Robie Memorandum was expressly limited to the geographical 26 areas covered by the litigation. Furthermore, Judge Robie entitled 27 the subject of the memorandum "El Rescate v. EOIR," indicating he 28

1 clearly had the lawsuit in mind when formulating the new policy.
2 Thus, Plaintiffs have sufficiently demonstrated that, at least on 3 the completeness issue, the relief sought by the lawsuit was in 4 fact obtained as a result of having brought the action. See Andrew 5 v. Bowen, supra.

6 b. Legal Basis

7 Under the second "prevailing party" requirement, 8 the court must determine whether there was a legal basis for 9 the claim. California Association of Physically Handicapped, 10 Inc. v. FCC, 721 F.2d at 671-72. While this requires some 11 evaluation of the merits, this evaluation is extremely 12 limited. The extent of the court's inquiry is strictly 13 limited to determining whether the claims asserted are 14 "frivolous, unreasonable, or groundless, or [whether] the 15 plaintiff continued to litigate after they became so." Ortiz 16 de Arroyo v. Barcelo, 765 F.2d 275, 282 (1st Cir.1985).

17 Andrew v. Bowen, 837 F.2d at 877-78 (alterations in original). The 18 purpose of this inquiry is "to ensure that the government did not 19 act 'gratuitously in response to a frivolous or legally 20 insignificant claim.'" Sablan v. Dept. of Finance of N. Mariana 21 Islands, 856 F.2d 1317, 1325 (9th Cir. 1988) (citations omitted).

22 Plaintiffs have clearly met this test on the completeness
23 issue. Despite the claims of Defendants, Judge Robie's formulation 24 of the new interpretation policy was not merely "gratuitous."
25 Despite the Ninth Circuit's reversal of the district court's 26 summary judgement, Plaintiffs could have pursued the litigation by 27 showing that EOIR's policy systematically violated class members' 28

1 statutory or constitutional rights. Whether or not Plaintiffs 2 could have actually made such a showing is uncertain, but such a 3 claim is neither frivolous nor unreasonable, and Defendants' 4 response to the threat of this litigation was more than merely 5 gratuitous. Thus, on the completeness issue, the burden shifts to 6 the government to show that its position was "substantially 7 justified."

8
9 2. Was the Government's Position "Substantially Justified"?

10 Under the EAJA, a prevailing party "shall" be awarded fees 11 "unless the court finds that the position of the United States was 12 substantially justified or that special circumstances make an award 13 unjust." 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(1)(A). This statutory language 14 "creates a presumption of a fee award" when this standard is met.
15 United States v. First Nat'l Bank of Circle, 732 F.2d 1444, 1447 16 (9th Cir. 1984). The burden is on the government to overcome this 17 burden by showing substantial justification. Timms v. United 18 States, 742 F.2d 489, 492 (9th Cir.1984).

19 In Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552, 565 (1988), the Supreme 20 Court held that the phrase "substantially justified" means that the 21 government's position must have a "reasonable basis both in law and 22 fact." The government must be "more than merely undeserving of 23 sanctions for frivolousness; that is assuredly not the standard for 24 Government litigation of which a reasonable person would approve." 25 Id. at 566. Rather, the government's position must be "justified 26 to a degree that could satisfy a reasonable person." Id. at 565.

27 In deciding whether the government's position is substantially 28

1 justified, a court must evaluate the reasonableness of the agency's 2 conduct giving rise to the action in addition to its litigation
3 position. Abela v. Gustafson, 888 F.2d 1258, 1264 (9th Cir. 1989);
4 Nat'l Wildlife Federation v. Fed. Energy Reg. Comm'n, 870 F.2d 542,
5 546 (9th Cir. 1989); Ramon-Sepulveda v. INS, 863 F.2d 1458, 1459
6 (9th Cir. 1988). A finding that either the government's underlying 7 conduct or its litigation position was not substantially justified
8 is sufficient to support an award of fees. Andrew v. Bowen, 837
9 F.2d at 879-80. When examining the government's litigation
10 position, initial opposition to the plaintiffs' position followed 11 by eventual capitulation at some later stage in the litigation may 12 demonstrate a lack of substantial justification. Spencer v. NLRB, 13 712 F.2d 539, 555-56 n. 58 (D.C. Cir.), cert denied, 466 U.S. 936 14 (1983).

15 In regards to the completeness issue, the government has not 16 demonstrated that both its underlying conduct as well as its 17 litigation position was substantially justified. The EOIR's pre-18 litigation policy led the district court to remark in his summary 19 judgment order:

20 This court is appalled by the apparent lack of concern which 21 EOIR and the immigration judges have demonstrated for the 22 rights of the alien respondent. Fundamental fairness and due 23 process have taken a back seat to administrative convenience 24 and bureaucratic guidelines.

25 El Rescate, 727 F.Supp. at 563. The Ninth Circuit's eventual 26 reversal of this order does not undermine its characterization of 27 EOIR's pre-litigation conduct. Furthermore, as to Defendants'
28

1 litigation position, the Court finds that EOIR's eventual 2 capitulation to Plaintiffs' demands after vigorously denying that 3 any changes needed to be made to its interpretation policy 4 demonstrates a lack of substantial justification.

5 Accordingly, Plaintiffs are entitled to fees for work
6 performed on the completeness issue.

7 B. Competence Issue

8 1. Are Plaintiffs a "Prevailing Party"?

9 a. Causation

10 To be a prevailing party, Plaintiffs must first show that, "as 11 a result of having brought the lawsuit, [they have] received some 12 or all of the relief originally sought." Andrew v. Bowen, 837 F.2d 13 at 877. Defendants have previously acknowledged that Plaintiffs 14 have substantially obtained the relief they had sought. In a 15 request to the district court's request for a status conference on 16 March 6, 1991, defense counsel stated, "Since this case was filed 17 on March 7, 1988, Defendants have undertaken many significant 18 changes that directly affect the competence of interpreters in 19 immigration court proceedings." Hausman to Gray Letter, March 6, 20 1991, Plaintiffs Exh. HH, at 54. These changes included providing 21 extensive training to the interpreters, undertaking a comprehensive 22 training development program, and developing a plan to create a 23 certification process for Spanish language interpreters.
24 Declaration of Kathleen A. Reyring, Plaintiffs' Exh. HH, at 56-58.
25 Subsequently, in their November 12, 1993 response to Plaintiffs' 26 motion for voluntary dismissal, Defendants agreed that the 27 competency issue had become "moot."
28

1 What Defendants do dispute, however, is that the changes that 2 have occurred were undertaken as a result of Plaintiffs' lawsuit.
3 To support their contention that changes were made independently of 4 Plaintiffs' lawsuit, Defendants point to the fact that EOIR began 5 to address the problems with interpreter competence beginning in 6 May 1987, nearly a year before Plaintiffs' suit was filed. These 7 pre-litigation activities of Defendants consisted of the following:

8 1. In May, 1987, EOIR began efforts to address the formal 9 training needs of the interpreters.

10 2. In August 1987, two EOIR employees began a study of 11 interpreter training and quality.

12 3. On March 2, 1988, the report from the study, entitled 13 "Enter Talking: Interpreter Training Approaches for the 14 Executive Office for Immigration Review," was delivered to the 15 Director of EOIR, David L. Milhollan. EOIR Report, Defense 16 Exh. 5, at 112-124. This report described the historical 17 problems with the interpreter/clerk position, and urged 18 adoption of the report's recommendation to design an 19 interpretation test, conduct training conferences, design a 20 post-conference proficiency test, and establish an interpreter
21 advisory committee. Id. at 116, 121, 124.

22 These facts, claim Defendants, show that EOIR's efforts to address 23 the interpreter problems were already well underway before 24 Plaintiffs filed their lawsuit on March 7, 1988, and that the 25 changes EOIR eventually made would have been made even without the 26 lawsuit.

27 This assertion, however, is undermined by events that took 28

1 place after filing of the complaint. The report delivered to 2 Director Milhollan described the interpreter/clerk as "the most 3 vulnerable staff position within the immigration hearing process." 4 Id. at 115. The report also cautioned that a "systematic method of 5 testing and selecting new interpreter applicants" had been 6 "historically lacking in the immigration process," and strongly 7 urged the adoption of the report's recommendations to correct the 8 problems. Id.

9 However, after reviewing the report, Director Milhollan sent 10 a memorandum to Chief Judge Robie in which he stated:

11 The following activities should not be assessed or developed 12 at this time: 1) a nation-wide interpreters' conference; 2) 13 qualifications for prospective employees; and 3) testing 14 and/or certification of interpreters.

15 Memorandum from Milhollan to Robie, July 21, 1988, Defense Exh. 5, 16 at 131 (emphasis added). The only actions Milhollan took in 17 response to the report was to: identify a preliminary list of 18 reference materials, such as dictionaries, to be provided to each 19 interpreter; establish a preliminary list of the subject matter to 20 be included in an interpreter's manual; identify institutions that 21 provide training for interpreters; select an interpreter advisory 22 committee; and "determine the feasibility of using ANSIR 23 capabilities for future interpreter training." Id. at 130-31.
24 Further advances in addressing the problem only came well after 25 Plaintiffs' suit was filed.

26 This fact--that EOIR was reluctant to implement solutions to 27 the problem, and only did so after Plaintiffs filed and vigorously 28

1 pursued their lawsuit--provides strong support for the conclusion 2 that the lawsuit was at least a "material factor" or played at 3 least a "catalytic role" in bringing about EOIA's changes
4 concerning interpreter competence. Wilderness Soc'y, supra.
5 Additionally, the fact that Defendants had to periodically report 6 to and receive input from Plaintiffs means that Defendants must 7 have had the lawsuit in mind when implementing their proposed 8 remedial measures on the competence issue. Finally, during a 9 deposition on January 7, 1991, Assistant Chief Immigration Judge
10 Henry Armstrong admitted that EOIR's program to develop and improve 11 interpreter training received "some impetus" from the district 12 court's order issued in response to Plaintiffs' litigation.
13 Armstrong Deposition, Plaintiffs' Exh. GG, at 41-43. Under the 14 totality of the circumstances, it is clear that Plaintiffs' lawsuit 15 played at least a catalytic role in bringing about the changes 16 sought.

17 b. Legal Basis

18 Plaintiffs have also sufficiently established that they had a 19 legal basis for their claim. Defendants have admitted that there 20 were serious problems with the competence of interpreters that 21 needed to be addressed. See, e.g., EOIR Report, Defense Exh. 5, at 22 112-24. When this factor is combined with the litigation history 23 of the competence issue and the conduct of Defendants in response 24 to the litigation, it is apparent that the government did not act 25 "gratuitously in response to a frivolous or legally insignificant 26 claim." Sablan v. Dept. of Finance of N. Mariana Islands, 856 F.2d 27 at 1325 (citations omitted).
28

1 2. Was the Government's Position Substantially
2 Justified?

3 Because Plaintiffs were a prevailing party on the competence 4 issue, they are entitled to fees unless the government can 5 demonstrate its position was substantially justified. Timms, 742 6 F.2d at 492. As was the case on the completeness issue, the 7 government has not demonstrated that its position was substantially 8 justified. Although the EOIR's pre-litigation conduct concerning 9 the competence issue was not as egregious as it was on the 10 completeness issue, and may have in fact been substantially 11 justified given the limitations on available funds to implement 12 effective changes, Defendants' litigation position on the 13 competence issue was far from "justified to a degree that could 14 satisfy a reasonable person." Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. at 15 565.

16 As Plaintiffs correctly point out, EOIR's own study, completed
17 in March 1988, characterized the high proportion of EOIR
18 interpreters with less than two years experience as "alarming," 19 Report, Defense Exh. 5 at 115, and recommended a series of remedial 20 measures including comprehensive training and the development of a 21 certification exam. Id. at 117-122. Despite this fact, no such 22 concern was reflected in Defendants' litigation posture or 23 expressed by Defendants in their response to discovery.

24 At his deposition on April 26, 1988, Chief Immigration Judge
25 Robie steadfastly maintained that the system being used to hire 26 interpreters was fine and that no certification examination was 27 necessary. Robie Deposition, Plaintiffs' Exh. DD at 39:1-15, 28

1 40:14-20, 168:1-22, 169:1-6. He also testified that the contract
2 interpreters were providing quality interpretation and there were 3 no problems. Id. at 143:13-22, 144:8-20, 187:12-19.

4 The management officers for the affected immigration courts,
5 who were responsible for directly supervising the interpreter 6 clerks and for interviewing and recommending applicants for the 7 position of interpreter/clerk, were also deposed. Brown 8 Deposition, July 1, 1988, Plaintiffs' Exh. EE at 46:12-14. Neither 9 management officer expressed concern over the competence of the 10 interpreters, labeling them "excellent," "outstanding," and "very 11 qualified." Id. at 116:13-18; Perkins Deposition, Defense Exh. 16, 12 at 400:5-7.

13 Similarly, Assistant Chief Immigration Judge Armstrong
14 testified that the interpreters were doing an outstanding job, 15 there was no need for improving the process used to screen 16 applicants for the job of interpreter, and that he was unaware of 17 any negative comments, other than Plaintiffs' lawsuit, concerning 18 the quality of interpreters. Armstrong Deposition, December 12, 19 1988, Plaintiffs' Exh. FF at 22:5-13, 93:1-6, 114:2-5.

20 Not until March of 1990 did Defendants reveal to Plaintiffs 21 their plans for a certification exam to screen applicants for 22 interpreter positions, and interim measures to enhance the quality 23 of interpretation. Frenzen Decl., Plaintiffs' Exh. C, at 3.² This

24 ²One may be curious as to how the defendants were able to keep 25 Plaintiffs from obtaining EOIR's March 1988 Report. It seems as 26 though despite repeated requests for production of documents that 27 would clearly include the March 1988 Report, Defendants never 28 turned over the report, stating that "[n]o such documents exist." These uncooperative responses to discovery, which reinforce the

1 repeated denial of any problem with interpreter competence, despite 2 EOIR's own March 1988 report to the contrary, and followed by 3 EOIR's eventual implementation of substantial new improvements to 4 increase interpreter competence, demonstrates a lack of substantial 5 justification for the government's litigation position. See 6 Spencer v. NLRB, 712 F.2d at 555-56 n. 58 (stating that when 7 examining the government's litigation position, initial opposition 8 to plaintiffs' position followed by eventual capitulation at some 9 later stage in the litigation may demonstrate a lack of substantial 10 justification).

11 Accordingly, Plaintiffs are entitled to fees for work
12 performed on the competence issue.

14 II. WHAT IS THE AMOUNT OF FEES TO WHICH PLAINTIFFS ARE ENTITLED?

15 A. Is the Amount of Time Spent Reasonable?

16 Plaintiffs' counsel have submitted detailed records of the 17 time spent on the litigation. See Plaintiffs' Exhs. G-O.
18 Considering the complex nature of the litigation, the Court finds 19 that the amount of time spent by Plaintiffs' counsel was 20 reasonable. Citing Hensley v. Eckerhart, 461 U.S. 424, 434 (1983), 21 for the proposition that time which was "excessive, redundant, or 22 otherwise unnecessary" should be deleted, Defendants make three 23 objections to the amount of time spent by Plaintiffs counsel.

24
25 district court's characterization of Defendant's discovery
26 responses as the most "uncooperative -- inappropriately 27 uncooperative responses to discovery [he had seen] in a long 28 while," Transcript of Proceedings, June 19, 1989, Plaintiffs' Exh.
B, at 4:11-13, provide further evidence that the government's litigation position was not substantially justified.

1 First, Defendants claim that no time should be allowed for work on 2 the completeness issue. This claim is in error for the same 3 reasons that support a finding that Plaintiffs have prevailed on 4 this issue. Next, Defendants assert that time spent after March 5 1990, when plaintiffs were informed that defendants had developed 6 a plan for interpretation improvements, should be deleted.
7 However, this argument ignores the important contribution 8 Plaintiffs continued to make with regard to monitoring and ensuring 9 EOIR's implementation of its reforms.³ Finally, Defendants claim 10 that the time spent in meetings of co-counsel should be discounted.
11 However, complex class action litigation such as this would 12 commonly require multiple counsel, and Plaintiffs' counsel have 13 already discounted the time spent in meetings of counsel by one 14 third. The Court finds that the hours spent by Plaintiffs' counsel 15 were reasonably expended.

16 B. Are Fees in Excess of the $75 Cap Warranted?

17 The EAJA provides that attorney's fees "shall be based upon 18 prevailing market rates for the kind and quality of the services 19 furnished," but "shall not be awarded in excess of $75 per hour 20 unless the court determines that an increase in the cost of living 21 or a special factor, such as the limited availability of qualified 22 attorneys for the proceedings involved, justifies a higher fee." 23

24 ³The district court specifically directed Plaintiffs to monitor 25 EOIR's implementation of its changes and to give their input to the 26 process. March 19, 1991 Reporter's Transcript, Plaintiffs' Exh. A
27 at 8. As EOIR represented in Quarterly Reports to the court, EOIR 28 continued to "carefully consider and adopt, where appropriate, any comments and suggestions submitted by the plaintiffs." Plaintiffs'
Exh. RR at 4.

1 28 U.S.C. § 2412(d)(2)(A).

2 In Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. 552 (1987), the Supreme Court
3 held that the exception for "limited availability of qualified 4 attorneys for the proceedings involved . . . refers to attorneys 5 having some distinctive knowledge or specialized skill needful for 6 the litigation in question. . . ." Id. at 572. The Court gave 7 specialization in patent law and knowledge of foreign law or 8 language as examples of such a distinctive knowledge or specialized 9 skill. Id. Reimbursement of attorney's fees above the cap are 10 allowed when such specialized qualifications are necessary for the 11 litigation and can only be obtained at rates in excess of the $75 12 cap. Id.; Pirus v. Bowen, 869 F.2d 536, 541 (9th Cir. 1989).

13 The Court finds that Plaintiffs' attorneys possessed such 14 specialized legal expertise identified in Pierce v. Underwood.
15 Most are fluent in Spanish -- a skill specifically identified by 16 the Court in Pierce v. Underwood, 487 U.S. at 572. See 17 Declarations of Counsel, Plaintiffs' Exhs. G to O.⁴ Furthermore, 18 Plaintiffs' counsel all had extensive immigration law training and 19 experience. Such a specialization has all of the qualities
20 identified by the Ninth Circuit as indicative of a specialization 21 compensable under § 2412(d)(2)(A) at a rate exceeding the $75 cap: 22 "expertise with a complex statutory scheme; familiarity and 23 credibility with a particular agency; and understanding of the 24 needs of a particular class of clients." Pirus v. Bowen, 869 F.2d 25 at 541; see also Nat'l Wildlife Federation, 870 F.2d at 547

26 ⁴All except Niels Frenzen are fluent in Spanish. Mr. Frenzen
27 is fluent in French and Creole.
28

1 (holding environmental law as such a specialized skill because "it
2 requires specialized legal expertise as well as the mastery of a 3 technical subject matter gained by the investment of time and 4 energy").

5 The Court also finds that such expertise was necessary for the 6 litigation. Fluency in Spanish was necessary to enable the 7 attorneys to communicate with the class members they were 8 representing. Furthermore, it was the critical combination of 9 skills possessed by counsel -- expertise in the complex 10 administrative immigration law scheme, familiarity with the 11 practical workings of the immigration court, and understanding 12 through bilingual ability of the practical problems inherent in 13 interpretation -- that enabled Plaintiffs both to pursue the 14 litigation thoroughly and to fashion and monitor workable remedies.

15 Finally, the Court finds that such expertise could only be 16 obtained at a rate in excess of the $75 cap. This of course 17 depends on a determination of the reasonable market rate for such 18 expertise.⁵ However, Plaintiffs have provided adequate evidence as 19 to the scarcity of practitioners in Southern California who possess 20 the unique combination of skills and expertise possessed by 21 Plaintiff's counsel. See Declarations of Ortiz and Mirell, 22 Plaintiffs' Exhs. P and Q. In response, Defendants argue that the 23 number of lawsuits that have been brought against EOIR and INS by 24 Los Angeles attorneys evidence "an abundance of attorneys" who are 25

26 ⁵If the reasonable market rate for counsel's specialized 27 services is determined to be $75 or less, counsel would not be 28 entitled to fees in excess of the $75 cap.

1 "ready, willing and able" to bring actions such as this one.
2 Defendants' Opp. at 33-34. Yet, as they acknowledge, the same 3 counsel for Plaintiffs also served as counsel in many of these 4 other actions, and Defendants only identify three other Los Angeles
5 attorneys who have done so. Id. at 34 n.17.

6 Thus, fees in excess of the $75 cap are warranted under § 7 2412(d)(2)(A).

8 C. What is the Market Rate for Attorneys With Comparable 9 Skills?

10 Plaintiffs have submitted two alternative methods to determine 11 the reasonable rate for counsel's services. First, they submit a 12 declaration from Douglas E. Mirell, partner in the Los Angeles
13 office of Loeb and Loeb, setting forth the rates that would be used 14 by his firm to bill for attorneys of comparable skills and 15 experience as Plaintiffs' counsel. Plaintiffs' Exh. Q. Applying 16 these rates to the hours involved would result in an award of 17 $1,497,680.60 in fees. See Plaintiffs' Exh. X, Table II.
18 Alternatively, they submit a 1992 bar association survey compiling 19 hourly rates for some 7000 attorneys in the Los Angeles area.
20 Plaintiffs' Exh. R. Using the median hourly rate for each 21 attorney's date of law school graduation and applying these rates 22 to the hours involved results in a total of $1,251,322.40 in fees.
23 See Plaintiffs' Exh. X, Table III.

24 The Court does not feel that either of these methods is a 25 particularly accurate indication of reasonable rates for counsel's 26 specialized services -- the former is merely one individual's 27 statement of the rates he would bill for attorneys of similar 28

1 skills, and the latter does not differentiate among areas of 2 practice. Accordingly, PLAINTIFFS ARE ORDERED TO PROVIDE, WITHIN 3 FOURTEEN (14) DAYS OF THE ISSUANCE OF THIS ORDER, ADDITIONAL 4 BRIEFING ON THE ISSUE OF WHAT IS THE REASONABLE MARKET RATE FOR 5 ATTORNEYS POSSESSING SIMILAR SPECIALIZED EXPERTISE. DEFENDANTS
6 WILL THEN HAVE TEN (10) DAYS TO RESPOND.

7 D. Plaintiffs' Costs

8 EAJA also allows a prevailing party to recover "other 9 expenses" associated with litigating its claim. The Ninth Circuit 10 has found costs to be broadly recoverable under EAJA, including all 11 out-of-pocket costs that are ordinarily billed to a client, such as 12 telephone calls, photocopying, postage, air courier, and attorney 13 travel expenses. Int'l Woodworkers of Am. v. Donovan, 792 F.2d 14 762, 767 (9th Cir. 1986). The costs submitted by Plaintiffs are 15 such costs. See Plaintiffs' Exhs. U, W. Accordingly, Plaintiffs 16 are entitled to costs in the amount of $102,355.84.

17
18 IT IS SO ORDERED.
